Increased By 50% In Ten Years

Norwood experienced its greatest growth in history during the ten-year period from 1950 to 1960, according to census figures released today which showed that Norwood's population increased by one half during that time, jumping from 16,636 to 24,907.

Norwood spurred ahead of Dedham in the population race and now stands as the largest town in the immediate area.

Only Needham showed slightly larger growth than did Norwood. That town went from 16,316 to 25,635 during the same decade.

Westwood's population nearly doubled to a 1960 figure of 10,332.

In releasing the population count for the Norfolk County towns under his jurisdiction, Nathaniel Tilden, Supervisor of the Census Bureau, said that these figures must be regarded as "unofficial" at this time.

Comparison with the last Federal Census of 1950 show a substantial increase in all communities.
